COMMANDING GENERAL'S Family Readiness Statement

The United States Marine Corps stands as a force in readiness, always prepared to act in defense of this great nation at a moment's notice. As Marines and Sailors it is our families that provide the essential network of support both at home and abroad. Families who are better equipped and ready to face the challenges of a fluid operational tempo enhance our operational readiness. As your Commanding General, Family Readiness is one of my top priorities!

A successful Family Readiness Program requires consistent and dedicated attention from commanders at all levels of leadership. Effective communication and education through the incorporation of command family readiness teams, family readiness officers, L.I.N.K.S, and the use of other MCCS resources is essential. As the Commanding General, my expectation is that we implement an extensive Family Readiness Program with determined involvement from the commanders in order to keep our Marines, Sailors and their families well-informed and well-prepared for any mission.

Our families are a vital portion of this unit and we need to ensure that they are enabled and empowered to better support our efforts and our way of life. Through the dedicated efforts of the commanders, command family readiness teams, and Marines and Sailors at every level, an effective balance must be reached between our professional and personal lives. Family readiness must be a constant thread woven into the fabric of our operational readiness.

Semper Fidelis!
